Open, she can also reply to to single mother's home that had an extreme makeover from monies from AC, as well as representatives last Fall. I personally participated in that Day of Service that extended for weeks. She will state it is all a scam, blah, blah, blah.

Well, let's wait and see. How do you respond to the list of all the charities she mentioned above? Are they indeed not real charities? Or are they simply not recognized by the IRS as such? What's the story with those?

Re: Advantages Conferences / Tim Darnell

I don't have the list of charities she is referring to, but a charity had to go through a screening process to get posted on a site. Do you really think a company would post a charity that is not real when it can be checked so easily. The list was probably removed as too many charities were contacting AC to get listed and that could be a full time job managing.

By the way, she can also comment on the $36,000 or so given to the ministries of choice for the millionaires that have presented at the last three MMC's.

Seems strange to me that they would do that, yes. This is a non issue for me, honestly. I could care less if they are contributing to charities or not -- though good for them if they are. But I want to make sure this point is clearly addressed for the sake of others reading these postings.

First, please tell us exactly what that means. Who gave $36,000 to whom?

Life Cycle of a Public Charity/Private Foundation

Organizations that meet the requirements of Internal Revenue Code section 501(c)(3) are exempt from federal income tax as charitable organizations. In addition, contributions made to charitable organizations by individuals and corporations are deductible under Code section 170.

Every exempt charitable organization is classified as either a public charity or a private foundation. Generally, organizations that are classified as public charities are those that (i) are churches, hospitals, qualified medical research organizations affiliated with hospitals, schools, colleges and universities, (ii) have an active program of fundraising and receive contributions from many sources, including the general public, governmental agencies, corporations, private foundations or other public charities, (iii) receive income from the conduct of activities in furtherance of the organization's exempt purposes, or (iv) actively function in a supporting relationship to one or more existing public charities. Private foundations, in contrast, typically have a single major source of funding (usually gifts from one family or corporation rather than funding from many sources) and most have as their primary activity the making of grants to other charitable organizations and to individuals, rather than the direct operation of charitable programs.

If you think your charitable organization is or will be a public charity, click Life Cycle of a Public Charity to view a chart showing the life cycle of a public charity. This chart contains links to helpful information about points of intersection between your organization and the IRS, including access to explanatory information and forms that your organization may need to file with the IRS.

I am not an attorney so I have no intention of arguing the fine points of law with you, but suffice it to say both the donor and the recipient must file tax returns. Why is it none of the many charities listed last year were registered with the IRS and are now removed from the AC website? I am sure everyone here has the deepest sympathy for the families devastated by these rare illnesses, but that doesn't explain why Timmy is giving to non-existent entities or why they are not properly registered with the IRS. The donor and recipient would both want to have the tax-exempt non profit status of a charity or foundation. That is dictated by common sense. So, if Timmy and his gang at Advantage Conferences is doing all this work for God's Kingdom I suggest he come forward with some verifiable proof and start getting involved with legitimate charities or help those folks that need it get set up with a registered foundation so his business and the recipients can have the tax advantages they are due!

My sympathies to all, but why is it a speaker at a "millionaire mindset conference" doesn't understand the advantages to tax-exempt/non-profit status for all parties involved? We can certainly see that the speakers have no business background whatsoever.

The question is open and on the floor, and she is welcome to address it. As I said, this is a non-issue for me as it relates to this company and how they do business. Whether or not they give to charity is irrelevant as far as whom is making money and/or who is being taken, if indeed that is the case. If one is to believe this company is corrupt, and that most people lose a lot of money with it, then giving to charity sure ain't letting anyone off the hook, my friend. And I am NOT saying they are corrupt or whatever. I am simply saying that IF that is the case, their charitable contributions do not exonerate them for it in any way.

As I said, the charitable contribution question, in my opinion, should be dropped by both sides of this. It is an irrelevant point. For me, I'll take your word that they do contribute to charities, or at least, to people in the need. So I would suggest we move on to the important nuts and bolts of the business, the opportunity to make money, and to the actual numbers. That's what is important to this discussion.

And for the record, what SBM said was, again, NOT a lie per se. It was simply a differing opinion as to the definition of a "legitimate" charity.

If SoapBoxMom stated that the world was flat, that would be her opinion and would also be a lie.

I am not beating a dead horse, it is very relevant as she has lied again.

There is nothing else to cover as we have hashed out that some do not like the network marketing industry period, some feel that faith has no place in the business world, and some feel this business is not legal.

I disagree on all counts and arguments have been made on both sides. I encourage anyone to read through the threads and make their own minds up after other outside research. Scam.com is surely not a definitive source.

We have covered the industry, we can covered the leadership, we have covered the product and value points, and we will not come to an agreement. I will go with the hundreds who have had a powerful experience at the MMCs, the people already having success in this business vs a couple people--1 of which states they were a rep and only dialed in on a few SBD, please read my words more carefully: her debate is on the issue of whether the charities are LEGITIMATE or not. So her saying that the charities on the site are not LEGIT is NOT a lie, but rather her opinion on the definition of a LEGIT charity. At least that's the way I see it.

My friend, you are just not defining "lie" correctly in this case. If she was to come out and say "AC does NOT give money to charities", then this might be construed to be a lie (though of course, we cannot know for sure either way without documentation). But to say that they do not give to LEGITIMATE charities is a completely different story...though to me, still irrelevant to this discussion.

Once again, I understand it is a non issue to you as you have continued to defend your bias and SoapBoxMom, I will continue to defend mine. But a lie is a lie, not an opinion in my book.

I guess that SoapBoxMom may think that all ministries, even those that are properly registered, are illegitimate as well. 18 such ministries and nonprofits benefited from the donations received by the millionaires sharing from AC at the last 3 MMC's.

I have taken it upon myself to read this thread from top to bottom in light of the person who printed such disparaging remarks about an organization caring for such an awful disease as Antley Bixler. There are a couple of people who seem to be open minded, but the rest appear to range from making ignorant criticism to blind faith of the company.

I would say to folks like SoapBoxMom, Renlyox etc that your belittling of another human being or organization smacks of hearsay and rudeness. On the other hand, SoapBoxDad does much the same thing and appears to be doing nothing but try and convert those on this thread that are dead set against his company and the gentleman running it and will never have their minds changed. There was one further back from PowerOldGlory that sounded like Advantage Conferences was a cult and Tim Darnell was David Keresh. Does he live in a compound? Scary!

OK, her posts are inaccurate and they are lies to me, as she has no experience whatsoever with the company or with the product and continues to posts her "inaccuracies." Even when confronted, she continues to post her inaccuracies.

The millionaire is presented a check and each ministry is mentioned when that session is over. I don't keep a list as it is where that specific millionaire's heart it at. We personally support several children abroad, as well as our ministry. One that I recall is the Mustard Seed and another is the CCA Christian Community Action in Lewisville, TX, and another was Habitat. CCA is an awesome organization, as well as Habitat for Humanity that you could research more if you are truly looking to support a ministry/non profit that does incredible things.

The Mustard Seed, just like all the others is not a registered charity. There is "The Mustard Seed of Central Florida" which is a furniture and clothing bank for a local neighborhood area in Florida and is registered. They accept gently used clothing, household items and cash. Now are you going to tell us that Timmy is not giving to Dallas churches, the Dallas Furniture Bank and The Salvation Army to help his own neighbors, but found an obscure small group in Florida? I think that you are grasping at straws Big Daddy. Give us proof that AC/Timmy boy donated to them or contact them yourself via e-mail and post the answer on here. I will be happy to wait while you verify these charitable offerings for us all.

<http://apps.irs.gov/portal/site/pub7...CacheTok=token> Please type in "The God's Child project" as SoapBoxDad supplied and you will find there is nothing even close.

If AC is full of upper echelon movers and shakers including attorneys then why are these charitable endeavors not legitimate? Why don't these lawyers see that these causes get registered with the IRS? Don't millionaires know enough as savvy businessmen to take all the appropriate deductions? Can't these millionaires afford reputable accountants to help them with this? Are you saying Timmy is such a clueless businessman that he doesn't want to write off these deductions for AC or his personal taxes? Re: Advantages Conferences / Tim Darnell

I have already and the first one shared which is listed 3 times on the link Mom provided was downplayed. There are literally dozens of ministries benefited and do not pretend for a moment that it will make a difference for you if a list is provided. A person can look at your posts by clicking on your name to see where you are coming from.

Our charitable giving and AC's giving is shared on our tax returns. I was able to personally give more than most people made last year. The Lord knows where my heart is at. How about you?

SoapBoxMom, I was led to this scripture tonight and I realize I have been stooping to your level, even though I have tried not to. Your consistent inaccuracies will not go unchallenged.

Be blessed as you read it:

2 Corinthians 10:3-6

your criticizing soapboxmom by saying I have been stooping to your level, even though I have tried not to and then you offer soapboxmom scripture????? How do you know that soapboxmom believes in the same religion as you do????? Has she specifically told you that she believes in the same religion as you do????? Do you respect other peoples religion if they dont believe in the same religion you do????????? Do you realize that religion and business opportunities shouldnt mix together because everyones religion is different????????????? Why is A.C. using religion in there business model?????????

Spanky, do a google search on "marketplace ministry" and do some research. It is not about religion as you call it, but a personal relationship with Christ and taking that into the marketplace in all you do. I respect all other beliefs, but Christians are not called to be punching bags by a person posting inaccuracies and pretending they are interested in the truth as SoapBoxMom and others have done.

Re: Advantage Conferences, is it Legal and ethical in its use of Religion?

For those truly looking to learn, read on.

Question: Why seek "Advice" from Millionaires? Are the products offered by Advantage Conferences really valuable? Are they worth the price?

Answer: You will not likely hear this question about the value of business mentoring from a successful entrepreneur. Successful people immediately recognize the value of entrepreneurial and business advice, and especially the powerful information delivered at

Advantage Conferences Millionaire Mindset Conference.

Here is why:

We entrepreneurs must make decisions every single day that affect our bottom line. We make major decisions at least once a quarter that can determine whether or not our business thrives or stays in business.

The point is, every decision has a greater or lesser "dollars and cents" outcome. Many of these decisions have ramifications that can and will radically affect your business and your livelihood.

One savvy move can make a business tens of thousands and even hundreds of thousands of dollars. One mistake can be costly, if not fatal, costing the entrepreneur his/her business.

Indeed, on the down side, a failed business can dramatically affect every aspect of your life, including your credit, loss of savings, loss of your marriage, and even loss of your health. A failed business is a very serious matter, undoubtedly affecting a host of important areas of one's life. At the very least, losing a business is not a pleasant experience, and is not to be taken lightly.

Statistics support the fact that more businesses fail than succeed. For that reason, intelligence and savvy in business are not just good ideas – business acumen and clarity of thinking regarding a host of issues are essential. The fact is, if you attempt to operate a business on a trial and error basis, you will probably go out of business, and quickly.

On the positive side, implementing one new strategy can dramatically enhance your business. Successful millionaires know what successful strategies are; whereas most people, including most entrepreneurs, only have ideas of what they think - might work. Emulating the "secrets" of people who have "been there, and conquered that", is simply the smartest route to choose.

When you understand the crucial nature of knowledge in business, you'll recognize the fact that advice from millionaires can be the most important asset you will ever acquire. Without it, your odds of failure remain high. With it, your odds of success are dramatically increased.

Understanding what we've just discussed is extremely pivotal for success in business ownership. It is the core theme of why Advantage Conferences is in business. Helping entrepreneurs succeed is our mission and purpose. This is what we are all about. We accomplish helping entrepreneurs through appropriate, highly unique education.

As for learning what Advantage Conferences teaches and the mentoring and value involved, yes there are many sources and we encourage folks to take the initiative and take ownership to read T.Harv's book and many of the great resources out there. There is an ongoing commitment, training and mentoring that is difficult to duplicate without the accountability and direction that AC or an organization like it provides. We surely are not the only organization that people can align themselves with and ultimately, they should find the best fit. I know that is the case in my life. A person can learn everything they teach in an MBA program simply by reading and plugging into outside resources, but the focus, accountability and structure provided by those programs equate to some programs costing

Lastly, Advantage Conferences is bold with their statement of faith to make sure that someone who plans on partnering with them knows what they stand for. The weekly mindset calls are led and reference scripture, so they need to know up front. If anything, it scares many folks away so it surely is not used for marketing purposes. I have witnessed the walk that backs the talk. Most folks are freaked out when you talk about finances and especially GIVING and the responsibility that comes with those finances.

With that said, there will always be people who question value, who state this and that and I guess that is to be expected. It saddens me when so called Christians on this board try to crucify folks and many of those posting have not been building AC. In fact, since AC is such a new company, the one of two that state they have been involved on this board, surely have not been there long enough to even build a business. In fact, we have hundreds of reps and I will share some of the powerful testimonials they they share internally with no financial incentive and no reward

To anyone researching Advantage Conferences, I encourage you to look elsewhere if you are looking for a "do nothing" get rich quick scheme. This is a business where a person is there to learn first, improve their mindset, and then build a business.

I do pray for those individuals on this board that they have direction, purpose and that they do not share opinions as fact.

SoapBoxMom, good luck with that wish list of yours. Like a private company will give that to you. I guess you know that so somehow you can feel superior.
