Wishyouknew, I do mostly feel sorry for you as you are delusional. I pray for you. As for the AG, I vetted this compensation plan and product out with my attorney well before I joined AC. In fact, we have several attorneys now building Advantage Conferences. Everything that I have posted on this thread is factual so I have no concern there, but you should be concerned. I have caught you and SoapBoxMom so many inaccuracies and one can read through the entire thread to read those. You are not just accountable to the AG :)

You are not even a half glass full person, you don't even have a glass and I do feel for your family. Yes a person has the ability to make a million with Advantage Conferences. 150 MMC-IV conference sales can do that. A person can make a million in real estate, insurance and so on as well, but that is not a promise or guarantee. In addition, any incomes that have been posted on press releases or sites are 100% verified prior. There is a disclaimer on the site and there is no tolerance for someone sharing an income that cannot be substantiated.

Alot of people who get involved in mlm are religious. Most mlm's spring out of Utah and target churches. I'm not saying that only religious people get involved in mlm or am I saying having faith is bad. What I am saying is that anyone who thinks the earth is 6 thousand years old or believes in creationism over evolution is probably so bad with numbers that a recruiting mlm just looks good to them. What's really funny is that there are piles of recruiting mlm's that have religious people as their leaders who know the numbers and know they are screwing their fellow man. Go figure.

What happens to the person who purchases the conference on E-Bay and then does not pass the interview process?

You make it sound like it is this very tough process to complete, but yet you are selling to anyone and everyone on e-bay?

Sad thing is the E-bay page fails to mention anything about MLM and does not give the whole story of what the person is getting involved with.
