Thanks for reiterating my point NoName and Once Upon. So instead of wasting my time actually replying to your hypothetical theories of scams and failures, I'll just watch my account grow. Sure, it's a risk. Driving to work is a risk. Maybe you both should team up and start a thread about how nobody should ever drive again because it's a risk and you two all-knowing individuals can really work hard and make it a non-driving society. LOL!! Think of all the money we would be saving for gas. I hope you do get that thread going because I'm sure you will be able to pursuade all to be convinced that your negative persona will emulate through their bones and they will follow you like zombies. LOL!! Wow, you have really given me some good entertainment. I'm done. Have a good day.

So, it's OK by you that you know even if you don't get screwed in the Banners broker process that there will be people below you that will?

You got that ethics certificate out of a box of Lucky Charms, right?

This is a print screen from:

http://bannersbroker.com/umutduman/main/contactus

I am from Cyprus and I can assure you that the place shown in the map is not Zygi, the post code is not 7739, and there is no such address as :

61 Grigori Afxentiou Zygi 7739, Cyprus

I can also assure you that the telephone number mentioned in the picture is located in an other district than the one being shown in the map.

In my opinion (and that is only personal) there is no legitimate and/or serious company which acts offshore and overseas and provides misleading and/or wrong information on their website!

Shocking!

Their Canadian address is an auto repair garage.

Their U.K. address is an insulation company.

I wouldn't like to play the role of a crusader nor here neither elsewhere. The only reason I spent some of my time doing some research on this company (and I admit that I didn't take it seriously enough) was because the IT manager in my company told me that she was invited to one of their seminars and asked my opinion about this "opportunity". This is how people is drifted to believe on what it is! An opportunity!

Hence I wrote to her my opinion.

As a part of my research I came across this forum and I thought that some people here might be interested to exchange some views.

I have many friends and relatives who are involved in this kind of businesses / "investments" and my conclusion after discussing their experiences and after attending several "seminars" is that the great majority of these people are victims, they loose money, or they loose their time, and they left with a bitter after-taste.

What would possess you to send money to a company that lies about their office locations?

The MLMs with "virtual" offices are a gigantic red flag. One that says they have offices that don't exist or are in an auto mechanic's garage, or an insulation sales office are so obviously a scam that even the most avid of MLM promoter should be able to see it. Even Doyle.

I think he was reiterating my point!!

Taking a risk on a new LEGAL business that has outside income and a real product is different than taking a risk on an illegal ponzi scheme.

Seems to me the risk w/ ponzis is when will the last person invest and will that be you.

Again, risking driving drunk(illegal) is different than buying stock in facebook.

And, you said my analogies are poor. There is a reason things are deemed illegal. Drug dealing is illegal as is stealing. The people that make money in ponzi schemes are stealing from people below them - Horrible for the ones that thought they were investing in a real company.

If MLM is such a wonderful business model, why aren't you still doing Amway?

There are two variables that one should take into consideration when he or she plans to make a long-term investment with BB.

One is the number of affiliates / members / agents!

I saw that BB is proudly announcing that they have now reached 100.000 members. In addition to that they forecast that this is going to be increased by ten fold in 2013.

Second is the size of the industry. We are talking for an industry that reaches 25 - 30 billion USD every year.

To be on the conservative site, and to minimize the room for debate, I would consider a virtual situation where the industry revenue is 40 billion USD every year and BB has only 100.000 agents and that this is going to be steady.

Since they claim that basic mathematics are essential in making a successful strategy I am going to use simple mathematics to make a point.

Let me first assume that every single "agent" has "invested" 250 USD in this company.

Let me also assume that the market share of this company has a potential to grow up to 50% of the total business.

That means the maximum revenue from the advertisers who decide to buy BB services is around 20 billion per year.

Of course if one deducts the operation costs, the fees to the publishers, and the profit withheld by BB the balance available to be used as profit earnings for the agents is (?) lets say 12 billion?

OK now to the question:

How long do you think all 100.000 members would be able to double their money until we reach the maximum of 12 billion, considering that the doubling time is 3 months?

Answer:

The answer is 30 months, under all the ideal circumstances that we mentioned above.

How do we calculate the answer?

100.000 X 250 USD = 25 MIL USD (initial capital)

Double that 10 times (every 3 months) and you reach the plateau of 25.6 bil USD.

Notes:

In this excercise I have not calculated the market heritage and corporate image of BB competitors. I am purposely ignoring them and consider them as loosers. I did not account the increasing number of members (BB claims that it is going to be booming next year).

Forecast:

This company will or will not continue to exist in the future. But I am sure for one thing! Its promotional campaign will be much different in the near future, the promises will follow a declining course, as well as the prospective investors.

Cheers!

PS. For some of us this will not be a surpise but rather a new version of the old story. Some others, well they will wake up!

PS2. I would also like to emphasize the fact that profitability is a key component for every business. Considering the highly competitive environment that we work in, the higher the profitability the higher the feasibility of a company will be. Now compare Google with its pioneer adsense, for instance, with BB. BB chooses to decrease its profits (if we take for granted their claims) to share some piece of the pie to its agents. Google does not. Google is a market giant while for now BB is an unknown quantity! Who do you think will prevail at the end of the day?

Sure!

As soon as I finish my conversation with the SEC.

If you have any money tied up in this MLM scam, I highly recommend you take it out. There is something called a "clawback" that happens when a ponzi or a pyramid gets shut down.
