Um, a serious internet advertising agency wouldn't let their own website crash for "maintenance" ever. No way no how.

That would be the equivalent of TD Ameritrade saying something like "We're terribly sorry, but you can get to your stocks when we get around to it.".

Problem will be when your carriage gets detached from the engine...and you'll never even know til its far off in the distance.

On serious note Josef, how often does website go down like this? Earlier it had maintenance page up but now completely disappeared. Is that regular?

Well, I will have to admit, the customer service along with the website is ridiculous. I was getting monthly e-mail reminders of my monthly fee being withdrawn from my wallet, but nothing now. Louis the Dog, Awesome rants there are these fools with zero proof this is a scam. Zip, Zero, Nada. Again, this being down crap, not good. Could it go under? Of course it could. Almost any company can go under. The ones in it are clearly hoping it doesn't and the jealous idiots who are not in it and screaming Ponzi with zero proof are clearly hoping it does so they can pat their moronic selves on the back. The PROOF that the ones in it and defending it have is IT'S STILL GOING AND PAYING! That's pretty much all they need my ignorant, foolish, moronic team that probably lives together splitting rent in a 2 BR apartment.

If this does turn out to be maintenance how unprofessional of the owner not to at least put a notice up.

Imagine having a reasonable amount invested say $5000 or $10,000 or so and being presented with this!

Site is now up, but does show under maintanence. I think what is happening is so many people keep checking it that it goes down and gives off those other messages. Not good of course, but nonetheless it should be back up soon. Some notice to the members would obviously be more than welcomed. I have heard the site still deals with Payza (formerly AlertPay). Is this true? I haven't been able to use it. Only STP. I also read (maybe on this thread?) that Payza as of July 2012 does not accept any type of HYIP or other "scam"? If they accept BB along with MasterCard for a pre-paid card, maybe that says some things as well? Oh, and Poyol, just because the bank is located "offshore" doesn't mean the bank is a scam. Not sure where you are coming up with that notion? Maybe somewhere in your play pin? lol

How could you possibly know what they are doing if you can't get ahold of them by phone or on the web?

Where is your money in this? Unless you own it, your "money", that they claim you made, likely is only worth the electrons it's printed on.

I've seen people suggest that the some who question these scams are perhaps jealous.

Let me be very clear. I for one would be no more jealous of this than I would be about the drug dealer or bank robber making money. I do not aspire to be a crook or an ignorant person for that matter. I do feel sorry for the victims but certainly not jealous of them.

Classic excuse heard many times before from MLM/Ponzi cultist.

If MLM is such a wonderful business model, why aren't you still doing Amway?

Re: Banners Broker

Concerning the proof that BB is an MLM=Ponzi=Scam Scheme I agree that indeed there is none.

All similarities with these illegal ventures are just coincidental:

- 1. All MLM presentations begin with pictures of multimillionaires as a proof for profitable choice! BB's bait: "double your money fast and easy, make money while you are vacating", is just coincidental.
- 2. All MLM are regularly proceed to overstatements regarding the miraculous effects of their products. Cancer fighting, the most effective in preventing diabetes, the king of herbs stuf are by no means similar to BBs aspiration of inventing the most effective way

- for promoting your business online! Any similarities are just coincidental.
- 3. All MLM include various payment methods including commission from the down-liners revenues. Any similarities with BB is just a coincidence.
- 4. All MLM direct your efforts to recruiting because the big money is there. Not in the actual sale of the assumed product. Any similarities with BB is nothing but a coincidence.
- 5. ALL MLM products are overpriced because this is how they get enabled to pay commissions and salaries to members. Comparatively one cup of MLM coffee costs around 50 times more than a conventional coffee because it is a miraculous product. What matters after all is the profit not the consequences to inflation and/or global economies. The fact that if an advertiser has a budget can get much more publicity if choose to go with any well established company instead of going with BB is, you guessed it, a coincidence.
- 6. All MLM are not famous for extra-ordinary customer service. All that people need to know is their up line people and how to attract more people in. The fact that BB has a number of fake addresses in its websites, they sparingly answer any phone, and they are faceless has no similarities with this. It is a picture of a very profitable organisation and any similarities are coincidental.
- 7. Most MLM are based on seminars or webinars so as to explain the various aspects of the miraculous products/services to prospective members and the marketing plan which is complicated as there are many ways of earning money in the system. The fact that about a week ago a colleague of mine invited me to attend a BB seminar is just coincidental.
- 8. In every single MLM scheme some people make money and they are willing to defend their income at any cost. Same story with BB. Not similar. Just a coincidence.
- 9. The great majority of members in any MLM after some time they give up any effort, they are silently withdrawn, and this is a fact that the whole feasibility of MLM is based on. Any similarities with BB is ... coincidental.
- 10. All these persons who make money in an MLM have a common culture and behavior. They do not hesitate to offend people, they name them morons, retarded, etc etc. Any similarities you might guess with BB it is just a coincidence.
